KA International School

In Tokyo, Japan, the new KA International School has recently opened, filling a niche in providing individualized international education. Tokyo residents will be aware of Kikokushijo Academy, affiliated with KAIS, and its reputation for providing education of the highest quality to the international community.

With impressively-educated teachers (hailing from a variety of countries), top-rated curriculum and central location in Setagaya-ku, KAIS provides a fully-accredited diverse, intensive, affordable, and specialized curriculum in English to motivated internationally-oriented Junior High and High School students.

Studying at KAIS makes it easy to continue education anywhere in the world as students graduate with a high-school diploma from California, with accreditation from esteemed seats of learning such as Stanford University and Laurel Springs High School.

KAIS is built on the foundation of personalized education, the idea that students and their parents should be in control of many aspects of their own education. KAIS follows through on that mission by allowing students to choose and design their own creative electives, with teacher-guidance, focus on the SAT exam, the TOEFL, or whichever goals they individually set, and still receive an impeccable well-rounded education. Small class sizes, set at a maximum 10 students per class, help to facilitate each student's personal needs and interests.

- Graduate with an accredited American diploma
- Flexible personalized program
- Specialized advanced English support
- Most affordable tuition in Japan
- Technology-enhanced academic and creative programs
- Small class sizes ensure individualized attention

KA International School provides a fully-accredited specialized curriculum in English, through Stanford University EPGY and other American high schools, to motivated internationally-oriented Junior High and High School students, grades 7-12. While it is one of the most affordable International schools in Japan, KAIS focuses on the individual, allowing its students to design their own education, choose many of their own classes, and undertake creative projects. KAIS also offers an after-school program for students attending Japanese schools.
